Interestingly, Emecheta's description of St. Simon is one of a town that harbors no overt racism. She decides that they would provide the right Christian home for her own baby, Chester. No longer does he have the doubts that hindered him previously. Probably the only solid or certain thing that Chester feels he has in his life. What may also be important about the story is the fact that despite the narrator calling Arthur, Ginny and Julia 'his family', Chester believes the recurring dream he has is about his real home. Chester has escaped into his dream while Julia has become introverted. The end of the story is also interesting as Chester for the first time in the story acts with surety or certainty. It is also noticeable that Arthur and Ginny love Chester regardless of the colour of his skin. Chester knows he is different. He is perplexed by the world he apprehends rather than finding any type of 'home'. Similarly when Ginny tells Chester that 'your people' are from the east; Chester again begins to doubt who he is. Emecheta convincingly captures the disjuncture between identities and their relation to the real. He fully accepts his circumstances. 95 (paper), ISBN 978-0-435-91204-8. Shortly afterwards, Chester is delivered to social services with a letter explaining that the Arlingtons should be his new parents. Chester leaves the Arlington's and St. Simon, moving to Liverpool and living with the Ugwu's. Emecheta describes Chester's perceptions of Nigeria in terms that convey his position as an outsider. This insecurity or doubt also manifests itself when Chester goes to school. If anything Chester not only accepts who his parents are (Arthur and Ginny) but he fully accepts who he is regardless of the fact that he is adopted. No longer is his life as simple as being Arthur and Ginny Arlington's child. For any other proposed use, contact the Reviews editorial staff at hbooks@mail.h-net.org. He is the son of Arthur and Ginny Arlington. I strongly recommend this novel in its uncovering of contemporary complexities in an accessible form. Emecheta thereby highlights the relationship between identity and memory as mediated forms of representation, with family and belonging being reliant on love rather than genetics. In The New Tribe by Buchi Emecheta we have the theme of change, love, insecurity, identity and acceptance. Ginny is so in love with Chester that she creates a small book for him about Nigeria. Chester eventually realizes that his memory of a Nigerian village is actually a memory of a book that Ginny had made for him as a child. The inhabitants accept Chester as the Arlington's son. He may have been born in Nigeria but he lives with the Arlingtons now. It is as though Chester cannot at times make any type of identification with the Arlingtons being his parents. Likewise when Chester grows older Ray is there for him. Despite showing calmness throughout the story there is one occasion in whereby Arthur gets angry. Web. 'Nis that your problem? Chester is always selected to play the part of the leader of the three wise kings in Christmas pageants because 'Athe kings came from the Orient, and would have looked like Chester' (p. He identifies with Ray in school when Ray arrives to the school and begins to cry. It is as though they are starting afresh. 2017. The reader realising that the trigger for Arthur's anger is not the fact that Chester has laughed at him but in reality Arthur knows the dynamic within the family has changed since both children became aware they were adopted. Emecheta may also be exploring the theme of insecurity, particularly when it comes to Chester. The New Tribe tells the story of Chester's long search for his true identity, and the challenges he faces as a black child in a white family. Neither boy appears to judge the other negatively. Chester's friendship with Ray Miller may also be significant as Emecheta may be using the friendship to highlight just how well-rounded Chester is despite the insecurities he feels. If anything Chester is accepting who he is. Though Arthur had hoped that both Chester and Julia would accept the fact they were adopted, without too much difficulty, this has not been the case. The story's central protagonist is Chester, a black child who is adopted by a white family consisting of Reverend Arthur Arlington, his wife Ginny and their white adopted daughter, Julia. Buchi Emecheta's, The New Tribe, tackles complex issues without sentimentality. The New Tribe. Which may be important as Ginny is making sure that Chester when he is old enough to understand will not forget his roots. Similarly when it comes to Chester's arrival, though hesitant at the start. Something he only begins to understand when he questions Arthur when he is older. A strong motif in the text is a memory that Chester has of a Nigerian village, an image that he tries to find in Nigeria. Enoch's 'Oextra parental enthusiasm' inspires Chester to continue with his education, as he becomes Chester's elder or guide in a wider context. He is the only black child for miles around. 79). Miller (the mother of Chester's best friend) refers to as 'His own people' (p. The two swap passports and Chester goes to Nigeria in search of his half-remembered village.
